Quiet market, yen spark, Fed confusion, negative picture, precious bouncy, Vix rise, reactive energy, rates up

It was a very quiet week with only small market movement, although ranges were significant. Well, not everywhere as the U.S. and the BOJ intervened in the Japanese yen market sparking a big jump for the yen. It was the week of the Fed and as widely expected the Fed left rates unchanged. But there was dissension as three members voted for a rate hike. Markets didn't like that and sold off but held on to gains for the week. Fed Governor Kevin Warsh didn't help matters. As expected, there was no forward guidance. Warsh sounded dovish. Bond yields jumped amid the confusion. Odds are rising for a September rate hike. Signaled inflation is less likely to negatively impact retailers, readily able to pass on price hikes to consumers, such as Loblaw Companies Limited that reported expanded revenue, increased gross profit, greater earnings, and stronger cashflow, pays a dividend and is held in the Enriched Capital Conservative Growth Strategy.* Irrespective of the stock market bouncing back, the overall picture continues to look negative.

We look at gold in three charts. Despite the steep correction all signs point to the drop coming to an end. Volatility has been rising. We look at the VIX Volatility Index as our chart of the week (page 7).

Under our oil and gas commentary we summarize the spreading war in the Mid-East not only engulfing the U.S. and Iran but also Israel and other gulf states possibly Egypt, Iraq as well and now even Ukraine. The direction of oil prices appears to be influenced by the whims of the TACO man (Trump). What will this week bring?

Overall it was a week of little movement, although the stock markets eked out gains, mostly. Interest rates rose and the U.S. dollar fell which is the opposite of what one would expect. Gold and silver were mildly down but platinum, palladium, and copper rose. Follow copper. Oil took a hit even as it rebounded at week's end. But will it last? TACO man speaks, and markets move. The charts argue against him as the overall drop looks only like a correction.

It's now August and we are roughly half way through summer. Enjoy. Have a great week.
